

Motherland: The Lived Experiences of New Mothers Attending Community Groups in Developing a Sense of Self and Belonging

AUTHOR Amanda Norman
COLLECTION EDITED BY Jan Etienne

COLLECTION
Gender Studies

EDITION
1st edition

MARKET
College/higher education and Professional and scholarly

This course reading...

- Illuminates the lived experiences of new mothers attending community groups as they navigate parenthood
- Provides a specific focus on maternal care beyond the home, underpinned by attachment theory
- Contributes to the Early Education and Care (ECEC) dialogue, about families and childhood from birth, with an emphasis on community care
- Is ideal reading for students of Gender Studies and related courses, Healthcare, Psychology, Sociology, Social Work, Early Childhood Studies, and new parents

In what ways can attending community groups help to develop a sense of self and belonging for new mothers as they navigate parenthood?

Using examples of lived experiences from mothers past and present, Motherland invites readers to explore how community groups have shaped and supported the social identity of their members.

Author Amanda Norman considers maternal care beyond the home and the importance of listening to new mothers as they share their lived experiences. Motherland explores women's community groups from historical and contemporary perspectives, and illustrates the power of a collective group and social identity in shaping mothers' relationships with their infants and each other.

Reflecting on the power of social identity and the importance of community work in supporting parents and families, this book is ideal reading for students of Gender Studies and related courses, Healthcare, Psychology, Sociology, Social Work, Early Childhood Studies, and new parents.

Amanda Norman EdD is a Senior Lecturer in Childhood Studies (Early Years) at the University of Winchester

Print edition: $35 / £45
Ebook editions: $40 / £55

Available as part of the 2023 Library Collection of 40 titles.