

Harm to Healing: A Pathway to Abolition

AUTHOR Felicia Carbajal
COLLECTION EDITED BY Ian Cummins, R. Anna Hayward

COLLECTION
Carceral Studies

EDITION
1st edition

MARKET
College/higher education and Professional and scholarly

This course reading...

- Draws on the author's personal experience and the experiences of others who have been incarcerated.
- Explores the correlation between growing up and living in an underserved community with incarceration.
- Considers what factors affect the lack of safety within a carceral environment, such as race, gender, and sexual orientation.
- Is ideal reading for students of Carceral Studies, Criminology, Gender Studies, Queer and LGBT+ Studies, Sociology, and Cultural Anthropology.

What impact on the safety of incarcerated individuals does race, gender, and sexual orientation have?

Drawing on the lived experiences of survivors of harm and incarceration and personal experience, author Felicia Carbajal reflects on the correlation between growing up and living in an underserved community and being incarcerated. Harm to Healing examines how the language of abolition impacts the lack of safety and insecurity caused by mass incarceration and envisions a prison-free world.

An eye-opening examination of the criminal justice system, this book is ideal reading for students of Carceral Studies, Criminology, Gender Studies, Queer and LGBT+ Studies, Sociology, and Cultural Anthropology.

Felicia Carbajal is the Executive Director of LA-based The Social Impact Center and a formerly incarcerated person.

Print edition: $32.5 / £25.99

Ebook editions: $26 / £19.99

Available as part of the 2024 Library Collection of 25 titles.