This course reading...

- Draws directly from the lived experience of those who have experienced forced migration, war, and oppression
- Examines how art, collective action, and other activities that work towards social justice goals can be sources of hope, even in the darkest of times
- Is ideal reading for students of interdisciplinary social science courses, including Forced Migration and Refugee Studies, and students of activist studies, Cultural Anthropology, Sociology, and political studies; as well as activists and policy makers

How can hope flourish from the devastation of war, oppression, and forced migration?

For the people featured in this book, this is not a philosophical question – it is a lived reality. Drawn from first-hand experience of violent conflict and displacement, the stories in this book belong to three extraordinary individuals who found a path to hope through action in the face of violence.

Ideal reading for academics, artists, and activists who are working around issues of social justice, Creative Resistance highlights the extraordinary actions of ordinary people in dark times.

Cindy Horst PhD is Research Professor in Migration and Refugee Studies and co-director of the PRIO Centre on Culture and Violent Conflict.
