

Music and Black Community in Segregated North Carolina: "It's All Right..."

AUTHOR Gregory Freeland
COLLECTION EDITED BY Christopher McAuley

COLLECTION
Black Studies

EDITION
1st edition

MARKET
College/higher education and Professional and scholarly

This course reading...

- Recalls and reflects on a period of the author's life, from segregated 1950s and 1960s North Carolina.
- Explores how music influences, impacts, and captures Black community, courage, and resilience in an unequal and unjust society.
- Discusses the relationship between music and Black identity through the lens of the author's experience.

Emotional courage is an underestimated characteristic of successful Black life in the segregated, unjust US south. Author Greg Freeland reflects on how music reflected, impacted, and influenced Black life in 1950s and 1960s North Carolina.

The celebratory aspect of the Black rhythm and blues, jazz, and gospel music of Freeland's life is one of his clearest memories of the time. In this book, he recalls and reflects upon how music was integral to the solidarity and resilience of his Black community in an unequal and unjust society. Through examples of music in the household, church, clubs, parties, and schools, this book explores how music worked in a manner that facilitated the development, mobilization, and realization of Black life.

Gregory Freeland PhD is Uyeno-Tseng Professor of Global Studies and in the Department of Political Science for California Lutheran University. A member of the Caribbean Studies Association and the Western Political Science Association, he teaches courses on Social Movements, Latin American/Caribbean Politics and Culture, and Music and Civil Rights Movement. In April 2017, he received a Lifetime Achievement Award from the Central Coast Alliance for a Sustainable Economy (CAUSE) in recognition of outstanding and invaluable service to the community.

Consumer print and ebook pricing available on the LPP website.
Institutional print and ebook pricing available through your chosen library vendor.
This title is available as part of the LPP Library collection.
For pricing, inquire at contact@livedplacespublishing.com.